Aims & Scope:

The smart technology of the future is required to become computationally intelligent so as to provide an affordable, reliable, and sustainable system to support the real time applications. Under such circumstances, considerable research activities have been carried out in various parts of the world to formulate and promote a vision for the development of the future smart technologies. However, how to achieve those smart features has been less reported. This special session focuses at identifying several specific areas of application of computational intelligence techniques for smart applications in future. The scope of this special session is to elaborate the computational intelligence techniques that are capable of achieving certain favorable features of various components in a smart real time environment.
